

MoS victory as David Cameron steps in to save memorial to Battle of Britain aces

- St George's Chapel of Remembrance in Biggin Hill, Kent, faced the axe
- Defence Minister judged its £50,000-a-year running costs 'inappropriate'
- But now Prime Minister has pledged to do whatever it takes to save chapel
- It has stood since 1951 as memorial to all British airmen who died in WWII

David Cameron has vowed to save the chapel dedicated to heroic Battle of Britain pilots after a public outcry over its threatened closure.

The Mail on Sunday revealed last week how St George's Chapel of Remembrance for 'the Few' faced the axe after Defence Minister Anna Soubry judged that its £50,000-a-year running costs were an 'inappropriate use of defence resources'.

But in a dramatic move last week, the Prime Minister pledged to do 'whatever it takes' to save the chapel at Biggin Hill, Kent, after a furious backlash from Mail on Sunday readers and campaigners.

Built on the site of the former RAF station – which played a key role in the 1940 battle to repel Hitler's Luftwaffe – the chapel has stood since 1951 as a memorial to all the British airmen who died during the Second World War.

The local airport of Biggin Hill offered to make up the funding shortfall following our report, but Mr Cameron's announcement now means the Ministry of Defence will maintain ownership and provide public money for the site.

'I can absolutely confirm to the House that the chapel will be preserved for future generations, as we have always recognised its importance and its rich heritage,' he said at Prime Minister's Questions.

He added: 'I think it's possible that of all the great moments in British history, the Battle of Britain stands out as one of the most important times that there have been.

'We will protect the chapel and will do all that we can to protect it for future generations.'

His intervention followed an online petition to save the church which gained more than 28,000 signatures. Campaigners also took to Twitter to express their anger at Ms Soubry.

What an insult to The Few

HOW CAN BRITAIN TURN ITS BACK ON ALL THIS?

Outcry: Our report last week on the plans to close the chapel, which caused furious backlash from Mail on Sunday readers and campaigners

The Prime Minister's announcement was welcomed by Mr Johnson, who has championed the campaign to keep the historic monument open. He described the U-turn as a 'triumph' for the public.

'We're in a very good place and the security of the chapel is secured,' he said. 'It's a great triumph to keep the chapel open, and one The Mail on Sunday has played a huge part in.'

TV presenter and local resident Jan Leeming was also pleased with the about-turn, but she criticised the MoD for the 'lack of thought' shown in its initial decision.

'I welcome Mr Cameron's promise and hope he keeps his word,' she said. 'Apart from anything else, the chapel is iconic – a place of peace, beauty and remembrance. Although a modern building, it has an aura of spirituality usually associated with ancient churches.'

In a statement released on Thursday, Defence Secretary Michael Fallon said: 'We have been in discussions with Bromley Council for 18 months and we are pleased that the council wants to create a heritage centre on the site. Subject to agreeing suitable terms to secure the future of the chapel, the garden of remembrance and the car park, we will lease the site on a long-term basis to the council for a token rent.'

Approved by Sir Winston Churchill as a 'permanent' shrine to 'the Few' of the Second World War, St George's was originally built to replace a military chapel destroyed by a fire in 1946. It is expected to welcome 25,000 visitors this year as it commemorates the 75th anniversary of the Battle of Britain.

The chapel was also threatened with closure in 1989, when the airfield was closed as an operational RAF base, but it was later saved because of its historical significance.

Battle of Britain Memorial Chapel? I did 22 years in the RAF and 16 years a an Mod civvy working for the RAF and I had never heard of this chapel before this story came out. I don't think the RAF are very bothered about it. Could be wrong though.

The 'Europhiles' would like to see that destruction of this chapel as it is an embarasment for their German 'friends'. The chapel and its two guardian aircraft must be saved for posterity, a lesson in history.

Shows the trouble of having a woman as Defence Minister. Boys grow up with a keen interest in military history and as men instinctively know the value of these places. Most girls grow up knowing nothing of such things, but that ignorance is of little consequence in the age of equality we now live in. Blunders like this are the price we pay for such foolish appointments. Roll on May 2015.

All those involved in planning for this should be sacked. If they did not realise during the meetings prior to the announcement that people would be outraged at the idea that it was too expensive at £50k a year to maintain a memorial to the pilots who saved the country, have no right to be planning any government policy!

Shows you the trouble the Government is in when Cameron has to stoop so low when somebody has already offered the money some time ago. He must have Sainsbury's shares and be a Honorary British Legion member who have dragged and sold the memory and gallantry of our fallen heroes for money.

Shows how much trouble Cameron is in to stoop so low to gain street cred, especially after somebody offered the money some time ago. He can always rely on the Governments daily biased paper (mail) to try and make out he was bothered at all!!!
